Hi Aaron,

Thank you for reaching out and for giving me the opportunity to provide context.

Student Life and Leadership understands that student leaders are balancing academics, employment, family responsibilities, and leadership commitments simultaneously. While those competing responsibilities do not excuse procedural oversights, they do provide important context for understanding how inconsistencies can sometimes occur within student-led organizations.

From my experience advising ASRCC, I do not believe any posting inconsistencies have been intentional, malicious, or intended to withhold information from students or the public. Rather, when issues have occurred, they have generally stemmed from inconsistency in administrative follow-through, communication, and timeliness within a student-run environment.

That said, compliance with agenda posting requirements and open meeting procedures is important. As the advisor, I recognize my responsibility in helping ensure student leaders understand and adhere to those expectations, and I will continue working with ASRCC to strengthen training, consistency, and procedural practices moving forward.

I appreciate you reaching out for context and allowing space for a broader understanding of the challenges student leaders navigate while serving in these roles.

Best,
Megan Bottoms

Subject: Comment on ASRCC's apparent Brown Act violations

To Dr. Bottoms,

Viewpoints is planning to publish a news story next week on the apparent pattern of Brown Act violations surrounding ASRCC's inconsistent posting of meeting agendas.

I cc'd you on the email I sent to President Jackson and Executive Secretary Soto requesting comment so that you're aware of what's happening.

I also asked for you when I stopped by earlier, but when they told me about the banquet I knew you'd be busy too.

I know your viewpoint also provides important context to the story most of us can't see, so I'd love to hear any comments or context you have on the Brown act issue as well.

Thanks as always for your time,

Aaron Friesen
